Academic American changes price structure

Grolier's Academic American Encyclopedia is now available to CompuServe customers on a monthly, semi-annual or annual subscription basis. This change in pricing structure eliminates the surcharge formerly assessed for each use of the AAE.

Ted Mendelsohn, vice president for information services at Grolier, believes this change will make the online encyclopedia more accessible to the majority of CompuServe's Information Services customers. "We did some research and found that CompuServe's customers may have been reluctant to use the AAE when they had to pay the surcharge and communication costs," says Mendelsohn. "We're offering the product at a fairly low annual subscription rate."

CompuServe customers who wish to access the AAE may sign up for a subscription rate plan. For the one-year plan, that rate is $49.95. The semi-annual rate is $29.95, and the monthly rate is $7.50.

In the near future, Mendelsohn plans to update the AAE on a quarterly basis; it's now done semi-annually. "We're constantly monitoring and tracking information throughout the year," says Mendelsohn. The actual process of compiling new facts and entering them into the online version takes about four months. The staff at Grolier has been involved in electronic publishing projects for nearly three years.

Grolier plans to add crossword puzzles to its current online offerings — the AAE and the WHIZQUIZ, an in-depth trivia quiz based on the information in the online encyclopedia. Supplied by Eugene Maleska, The New York Times' puzzle editor, the crosswords will be available on a subscription basis with a new puzzle issued weekly. Subscribers will be able to download the puzzles from CompuServe to their own printers.

TICKERSCREEN

Product Highlights

Tickerscreen adds direct order entry capability

Through a discount brokerage firm in New York, direct order entry of stocks, bonds and options is now available on CompuServe's Executive Information Service. Direct order entry is provided by a new function of Tickerscreen™, the online brokerage service provided by Max Ule & Co. Inc.

Executive Information Service subscribers who are or will become clients of Max Ule & Co. can place "buy" or "sell" orders by linking up to CompuServe.

"There is a distinct advantage to using the direct order entry function," says Max Ule, president of the company. "It is as though a client is working on the floor of one of the exchanges." Through Tickerscreen, a client can check the closings, volume and indexes. Also, Tickerscreen provides access to in-depth company information from one of many financial databases on the Executive Information Service.

The client has the convenience of greater control. "Many times orders are missed or late because of conflicting schedules and time zones between the client and the broker," says Ule. "Direct order entry eliminates those problems. No longer are the clients victims of brokers' busy schedules. Orders can be placed anytime. All are sent to the floor the next business day."

The direct order entry function is restricted for security reasons to Executive Information Service subscribers who are also Max Ule clients. The other Tickerscreen functions are available to all subscribers. Those functions include closing New York Stock Exchange prices; commission comparisons — pre-May 1975 vs. Max Ule; new issues calendar; activity summary of the 10 major market indexes and a Feedback section that allows Executive Information Service subscribers to request membership applications or additional information about becoming a Max Ule client.

Those who become Max Ule clients can then place orders to buy or sell stocks, bonds and options on either a market, day-limit or good-to-cancelled limit basis.

Also available on Tickerscreen is information about individual retirement and Keogh accounts, Ginnie Mae Certificates, Zero Coupon Bonds and options trading.

ONLINE TODAY ADDS ELECTRONIC EDITION

Product Highlights

Online Today adds Electronic Edition on CompuServe

Online Today magazine has launched an electronic edition featuring constantly updated videotex and computer industry news items, additional product reviews and a reader feedback system. Online Today Electronic Edition is using videotex to reach its readers with the latest news, in-depth follow-ups to printed articles and more.

Online Today magazine is edited for people and businesses on the leading edge of the information revolution. Its editorial content is targeted to information-oriented consumers who want to discover more about CompuServe's information services and micro-based communications in general.

"The Electronic Edition of Online Today takes the printed version a step further by providing its readers with an electronic link to advertisers, writers and editors," says Calvin Hamrick, Online Today publisher. Adds Doug Branstetter,

Online Today editor, "We saw the Electronic Edition as a logical extension of a computer communications magazine and as an added service to our readers."

In addition to updated computer and videotex industry news, the Electronic Edition contains reviews of software, hardware and books, an online Shopper's Guide to the classified ad section, a Letters to the Editor area for feedback from readers and a new product announcement section called Industry Watch.

The Electronic Bounce Back reader service system was also expanded to include all online reviews and product announcements. The EBB system allows readers to request product information directly from advertisers and manufacturers via the CompuServe information network.

Another section of Online Today Electronic Edition is Electronic Update, designed to complement the printed CompuServe Update section of Online Today magazine. In Electronic Update, you'll find stories specifically about CompuServe's Consumer and Executive Information Services. When online products are added or changed, Electronic Update will keep you informed.

You may access Online Today Electronic Edition by selecting User Information on the main menu, by choosing the Personal Computing section (GO PCS-10) or by typing GO OLT at any prompt in the Consumer Information Service.

To keep up-to-date on happenings in the computer industry and in CompuServe's Information Services, GO OLT and enter the world of electronic magazines.

Aviation Services GO SFP-20

Aircraft Insurance Buyer's Guide contains helpful information to guide aviation professionals in purchasing the proper aircraft insurance coverage. Also included are digests of recent actual court cases following accidents in which insurance companies refused to pay. Written by FAA licensed Airline Transport Pilot

Jay C. White, the Buyer's Guide provides nontechnical information for the professional with limited time to devote to insurance needs.
GO AVL

Peak Delay Guide helps pilots avoid potential and known delays at major hub airports in the U.S. and their associated satellite airports. Information displayed for each airport includes the number of hourly arrivals and departures of scheduled commercial airlines and air taxi operators, the busiest quarter hour within each hour for arrivals and departures, plus the busiest outbound directions and fixes.

GO PDG

Flight Planning — three programs are available which prompt the user for all necessary input to calculate a complete flight log between any two points in the continental U.S. One program produces a Great Circle RNAV flight route.

A second creates an incremental approximation to a Great Circle course via VOR/DME stations. The third program accepts user entered NAVAIDS and creates an incremental approximation to a Great Circle course. The database includes the coordinates of nearly 6,000 U.S. airports and will accept the latitude and longitude of airports not included in this database. Each program offers the effect of forecast winds aloft on the flight plan, the estimated climb and descent profile of your airplane, endpoint weather forecasts, enroute weather briefings and alternate destination weather forecasts. Users may now register their aircraft's fuel burn and performance data. This enables all of the flight planning programs to calculate fuel burn and aircraft performance using the exact data for each particular airplane and for each individual's flying habits. The programs were developed by EMI Aerodata Inc.
